

SUPPORTING PEOPLE WITH DISABILITIES WHO ARE VICTIMS OF CRIME

Lack of awareness that what they are experiencing is abuse

Communication barriers (sign language, plain language)

Lack of accessible and disability sensitive services

People with disabilities face significant barriers to reporting crime. Examples include:

Dependency on their abuser for primary care and financial support

Fear of law enforcement authorities

Lack of information about their rights and options

People with disabilities who are victims of crime are not believed or seen as credible when they report a crime

DAWN CANADA's recommendations

Victims with disabilities need time and resources for individual accommodations.

There is a critical need for disability sensitivity training.

Justice personnel and victims services workers should proactively seek expertise around disability.

Collaboration between the judicial system and all sectors involved in the prevention and response to violence is needed.
